I shouldn't have let my best friend talk me into doing this. I seriously thought kissing a stranger would be a good idea? The fact that it was the best kiss of my life, with the most handsome guy I'd ever seen, just complicated everything. Getting dumped on him didn't help either. I only had a week left until I graduated from university, and I was ready, but something changed everything.

There is someone trying to target my father and his political career through me, and the only way to escape this situation is to run away with the last person I want to see.

Did it have to be that man who helped me?

There's a mystery to his silence, and I'm suspecting he lied about his real name.

Trusting my life to a stranger to cross the country could be the worst decision I've ever made, a reckless and risky decision.
